

The found corpse

It was a clear dark night, a bustling coruscating city. The atmosphere was somewhat calming with a light and pleasant wind. Along with cars driving on the street and people walking everywhere, it was a overpopulated city. Robert was on his way home with a pleasant grin as he was praised for finishing the crime scene. As he accelerated on his way home, he saw a dreadful alleyway full of suspicion. Robert parked his car and started approaching the alleyway.

The sight of garbage bins, empty liquor bottles and discarded furniture, this location is definitely not abandoned. As he wandered deeper into the valley, he smelled odour together with rotting rubbish. Robert took several photos with his phone around the alleyway, he needed assistance since a phone can't do much. He left the area, approached his car and took off.

The sun is bright, the sunlight isn't warm and harsh. The curtains billowed in the breeze along with the birds chirping. Robert, got ready for work including making his morning coffee unrushed. He obtained his keys, locked the door and went to his car.

When he had arrived, he started printing photos from his phone to look thoroughly through the photos. Everything he saw yesterday was precise, no differences. He got hold of the photos and put them up in his so-called "investigation folder" where he preserves his evidence. Robert noticed something was off with a specific photo, the photo of the garbage bin. There were blood stains on it, however, it was well hidden. The person that caused it perhaps didn't see the slight reveal of the blood stain from the garbage bag covering it. He left quickly and drove to the same place.

When he had arrived he didn't hesitate to go there alone, because he was very wise, he had never doubted himself. The place was still intact and the stain was still there. Robert started examining the stain along with the garbage bags, no sign of suspicious activity, yet. Robert took a sample of the blood in a glass tube moreover leaving the blood due to not causing a scene in case the murder returns.

Robert made an appearance at a lab, swiftly walked towards a room and gave the blood sample to a trusted DNA analyst. Since this was his second time arriving, he explored around somewhat. Nevertheless, he didn't have time. It was time to show his colleagues this bizarre investigation. Robert accelerated on his way to work, along with the sun shimmering on such a peaceful day.

The man with a charming grin made an appearance at his office, prepared to show his evidence he collected alone. As the door opened, he asked his colleagues to come and take a seat. In the meantime Robert was presenting his evidence, his colleagues were fascinated. "I see where you're coming from but excluding the insides, shouldn't we investigate the buildings inside?" his colleague asked. "Correct, me investigating alone would be quite risky since I have no backup. That's actually why I'm showing this, we should get to the bottom of this." No one in the room had seemed to decline, so they organised an investigation along with the police.

When they showed up in the afternoon more and more cars started showing up as well. The alleyway was behind the city, so it wasn't overpopulated. The crew approached the exact place in the alleyway and started investigating once again, in search of fingerprints and more. They opened the doors leading to more clues. Robert had gone up to a second floor in a building to check what was up there, there wasn't anything so far. But when he found a back door in the bedroom leading to something, it was a corpse wrapped in plastic.

(I made the ending as a cliffhanger because I'm pure evil)